communication. Eberhart, Paul Frisi, and others, argued that the aurora is nothing more than electrical discharges transmitted through parts of the upper regions of the atmosphere so rarefied as to produce the peculiar luminous appearance which they exhibit. M. de la Rive, acting upon a hint given by Morlet, succeeded by an ingenious experiment in producing on a small scale the phenomena of the aurora, by a union of magne ic and voltaic electricity in rarefied air .-Silliman's Journal, commenting upon this experiment, says, it "appears to account very satisfactorily for what passes in the phenomena of the aurora borealis; in fact, the light which results from the union of the two electricities in the part of the atmosphere which covers the polar regions, instead of remaining vaguely distributed, is carried by the action of the terrestrial magnetism round the magnetic pule of the globe, whence it seems to rise in revolving columns, of which it is the base.' This theory of the electric and magnetic origin of the aurora is not established beyond d'spute. Professor Olmstead, in a paper presented to the American Association at New tinven in 1850, argued in favor of its cosmical origin; first, from the extent of the exhibitions, which is greater than could arise from any terrestrial emanations or atmespheric precipitations. Secondly, from the velocity of the motions, which are too great for any terrestrial forces. Thirdly, from the occurrence of the different stages of an autora, (the beginning, maximum, and end) at the same hour of the night, in places differing widely in longitude, which indicates that successive portions of the earth, in the diurnal rotation, come under the origin of the nurors situated in space. Finally, from the periodicity of the exhibitions; the diurnal, which shows a relation to the position of the sun with respect to its position; the annual, which indicates a relation of the auroral body to the earth's orbit; and especially the secular, (that is, its occurrence in a series of years and then ceasing for a time) which implies a cycle, at the end of which the auroral body and the earth return to the same relative position in the heavens, while the very existence of such a secular periodicity takes the phenomenon out of the pale of terrestrial, and places it within the pale of astronomical causes. This theory also infers that the auroral body (whence the material of the aurora is derived) is a nebulous body of light, semi-transparent, inflammable and amgnetic matter, revolving around the sun; and that probably there are many such collections of nebulous matter diffused through the planetary spaces .- Boston Journal.

A ROMANCE.

The traveller who has been fortunate enough powers brought into play by her spirit of sociability, can comprehend the bliss of a good looking bachelor, whose car adventure we are about to relate.

This worthy gentleman was a passenger on the Central Railroad on Monday last, and happened to be in the car that was pretty well stocked with humanity. He had managed to retain a seat from the commencement of the journey, until the train reached a stopping place, where a fresh supply of N. C. JOHNSON, Professor of Penmanship, passengers entered it, when he gallantly sur- 8. T. WILLIAMS, Esq., Mercantile Law. rendered it to an old lady, and made up his mind to stand awhile. Now it happened that a young and stylish looking lady noticed the act, and so pleased was she to see an old woman treated politely, that she at once reproved her carpet bag from the end of the seat she occupied, and invited the gentleman to take its place. Nothing loth, our hero accepted the modest invitation, and was soon engaged in a friendly conversation with the belle of the train. They chatted in lively style until the " shades of night were failing fast," when the lady's utterances grew slower, then indistinct, and then altogether ceased, for she was asleep.

Not being disposed to follow her example, the centleman amused himself by watching his fellow passengers, and was reminded of his companion's presence by her head touching his shoulder. Morpheus had her completely in his folds, and by a series of graceful nods she unconsciously sought the support of her railroad acquaintance.

The bachelor was delighted at the first gentle touch, but his pleasure, when, in the sweet abandonment of sleep, her form nesiled down until its whole weight bore entirely upon him, baffles description. The better to support his lovely burden, he placed his arm around her waist, and then gave himself up to the delirium of the moment.

Afterpassing the next station, a gentleman entered the car containing the person above referred to, and commenced examining the faces of each occupant as though he was in search of some friend. In the darkness of the hour he passed the sleeper and her supporter without noticing them, and it was only when he returned to retrace his steps that the scene attracted his attention.

In a moment the shade of anxiety on his features was succeeded by a frown, and he stepped quickly to the side of the fair sleeper.

As his hand descended heavily upon her shoulder, she started, opened her eyes and sprang to her feet "blushing celestial rosy Before the bachelor could speak, the new comer politely informed him that he would take care of his own wife, if he had no objections, and straightway led the lady to

The explanation that ensued unfolded the fact that the lady had been absent on a visit for some time, and was then returning to he faithful husband, whose impatience ed him to meet her half way. Eager to neet her, he had entered the ear only to find her asleep in the arms of a stranger!-Of course the stranger told how it happened; but the frown did not pass away from the brow of the husband until they left the car. Ladies should be careful how they fall asleep on the wrong vest pattern.
